Bad complexions, blotchy and rough skins, deficient cycbrows and cyclashes, and bald heads are becoming common characteristics not only of the frivolous or dissipated classes, but of the respectable and sedate community as a whole. IN COURT AGAIN TO-DAY.

The Argument on the Motion to Quash Postponed for Two Weeks.

The expectation that argument in the Star-route cases would be opened this morning, coupled with the rumor that Guiteau was to be brought in for arraigument, had the effect of crowding the Criminal Courtroom to an uncomfortable extent. Long before the judge appeared the space within the bar was completely utilized, and that without, left for ordinary spectators, had

I do not at present even so much as know what it may be deemed proper in consultation to make as a response to this motion. I may barely suggest, however, to your Honor at present that I entertain very decided doubts as to whether the motion can be entertained at all; whether a paper placed upon the files of the court can be stricken off and the motion rescinded, or whether in an information any more than in

I regard this case as of a great deal of importance, not simply to the defendants, but portance, not simply to the derendants, out as involving a very important question of practice, and one which it is well to have settled by the ruling in this case. That question is, whether the expense, labor, bother, of grand jurors can be entirely dispensed with, and whether the District Attorney, with such associates as he may be pleased to employ can be used the District Attorney, with such associates as he may be pleased to employ, can be used in the place of these jurors? I say, your Honor, it is an important question; one, I think, worthy of full discussion. I would like to take part in such discussion. The Court, however, will see that it would hardly be proper for me, representing one, and only one of the defendants, to argue the motion this morning and then allow days and it may be ing, and then allow days, and, it may weeks, to clapse, because the health of the distinguished counsel from Philadelphia is not entirely secured, before a reply could be had. The gentleman wishes a continuance, and 1 am willing he should have it.

First, Tuesday, second, Wednesday, will go further, and agree that you may have two weeks. In that time the gentle-men may be able to not only recover their health, but to be able to find some law that will support this action. [Laughter.] I have to go away to-day, as I said to the Court before. I will be back certainly within two weeks from to-day. It would be a great favor to me, and certainly the government could lose nothing by it, if a continuance were had for two weeks. Personally, I have no complaint in the world to make. Now, I beg leave, very kindly, to assure my brother that the law has been examined and studied by us, and it might not be improper for me to kindly suggest to him, if he is in doubt about the correctness of the law, as it is foreshadowed in our information, for him to be prepared for an intellectual or legal surprise. [Laughter]. The law does exist, and it will afford me great pleasure to accommodate his kind and amiable disposition and intellect by an exhibition of it whenever the proper time arrives. [Laughter]. The Senate Proceedings To-Day.
In anticipation of the visit of the French guests, the several galleries were rather more crowded to-day than usual. The Senators were slow in taking their seats, prefering during journal reading to stand around in groups conversing. The business of the day was opened by Senator Lamar who moved to call up his inter-occanic resolution of inquiry offered yesterday. Before he was recognized, however, Senators Logan and Pendleton walked down the main aisle arm-in-arm and paused before the President's desk, attracting the latter's attention. Bowing, Senator Logan said:

NEW YORK Oct. 14.—Concerning the tention. Bowing, Senator Logan "M. President, the committee appropriate to wait upon the President form him of the appointment of Hon. This clipping charged Secretary Windom with withholding the report from publication because it would show complicity in the frauds against Mr. Sherman, who, it was alleged, used the sums fraudulently obtained in working up his nomination for the Presidency at Chicago last year. In his usual ley manner, Mr. Sherman said the writer of the article was very much mistaken in supposing that he had requested or desired the report suppressed. He wanted to have published any report or any information that in any way referred to the transactions of the Treasury under his administration. He was especially anxious to have the report in question published. Secretary Windom had not thought proper to publish the report lest it might do injustice to a valuable officer. He (Mr. Sherman) did not doubt that Mr. Windom would afford any officer whose name appeared in this report an opportunity for explanation. He desired the resolution adopted.
